The Gospel Tract That Touched China From America

“The best thing I can do is enjoy the pleasures of this world, for there’s no hope for me beyond the grave.” That is what a 16 year old boy named James thought to himself. Although he had been raised in a devout Methodist home, he was frustrated by his growing feelings of doubt about God. He had tried acting like a Christian by doing the right things and associating with the right people, but he failed miserably. James thought to himself, “For some reason I cannot be saved.”

Then, one afternoon, James found a Gospel Tract on a bookshelf in his home. While reading through the tract the phrase “the finished work of Christ” stuck out to him. “What does that mean?” he questioned.

In a moment he remembered something from his religious training: “And He Himself is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only but also for the whole world” (1 John 2:2).

Then he thought to himself, “If the whole work was finished and the whole debt paid, what is there left for me to do?”

Years later James wrote these words about that moment when the truth finally hit him: “With this [thought] dawned the joyful conviction...that there was nothing in the world to be done but [to]... accept this Savior and His salvation.”

It was not long after this eternal decision that James—James Hudson Taylor that is—now called one of the pioneer missionaries of the 19th century, received his call from God to take this same Gospel of grace to China.

God’s heart for the lost explains why He has so often used gospel tracts not only to carry the Gospel where men sometimes can’t go, but also to motivate men and women to join Him in seeking to save that which is lost.
